Surely the time has passed even in Egypt
for fresh opportunities to be created for the practice, of cruelty such as that involved in the shooting of innocent briefs for gambling purposes, disguised under the name of sport.
Eyen the few who defend the practice cannot deny its cruelty, and have nothing to urge in its favor, merely contenting themselves with comparing it with other undoubtedly eruel pastimes.

How on earth can cruelties practised in Sagland or on the continent condone wrong (one in Egypt! This, too, is not a question of he aboliton of pigeon shooting at the Velo-rome, but one of its institution at the A.S.C., club mainly, though by no means entirely, unparted by Entith residents.

A very valuable book entitled "The Pringentit this to take place without a word of remonstrance against the impurity of the thing."

People seem somehow to be tongue-tied in Egypt, and to have so many diverse interests to study that they are afraid to open their mouths. Letters to the papers we get, but they are mostly written under noms-de-plume, and are mostly written under nonseferplane, and as consequence do not carry anything like the weight they would it the writers signed their names. And in this case it ought not to require much effort to append one's name to a protest against crenity to poor, defencedees brits, and waston destruction of animal info. After this one may expect to find prison or lonatic asylumi authorities making it a matter of longerstationte that the number of immates abows similar 'marked progress."

It is exceedingly gratifying to find that the proposal of the A. S. C. to introduce pigeon shooting on the club ground, is meeting with strenuous opposition. It will be simply disgraceful if the committee persist in their incretion, and lift the members of the club permit them to carry out such a retrograde step.

Mr. Rudolph has rendered yooman's service to the cause of humanity in the past, but he probably never helped the cause of truth and honesty more than by his later in last Wed-nesday's paper. Nor did he err on the side of want of charty, for he could have made out a much stronger case than he did, and I should not wonder if there is a good deal of flatter in the dove cotes, not munited with anxiety as to what further revelations he may make as to so-called conversions of Jews.

A very valuable book entitled "The Principles of Heredity," by Dr. G. Arabdall Reid, has lately been published, about which I hope to be able to write at some length when I have completed my study of it. Valuable as a medical treatise on a subject upon which hitherto no text books have appeared, the technical part of the work is small compared with the matter that the general reader can appercaide, and the concluding chapters, in which the subject is approached from the mental and religious point of view, are instructive in the highest degree.

perhaps is also obtainable at Cairo.

The volume consists of the Gifford lectures delivered at Editoria University in 1901-2, and it contains many very striking features, one of the most interesting of which is the discussion of the jahrenneon of conversion. The views of so eminent a psychologist on such a matter are well worth studying, however disposed orthodox theologisms may be to pick holes in them, and to dispute the professor's conclusions.

After an exhaustive analysis of religious experiences, which extends over nearly 500 pages, the professor asis, "is the existence of so many religious types and sects and creeds regrettable".

And to this question he answers emphatically "No.", giving many very cogent reasons for this conclusion, which I regret I have not sufficient space now to enumerate. The high spiritual discernment of the author is evidenced all through the book,—a very rare thing in purely scientific literature,—which greatly adds to its value.
